DEVELOPING REGENERATIVE THINKING

February 19-21, 2016

Spillian, Fleischmanns, New York

As Spillian embarks on a master planning effort aimed at guiding its future evolution, all those interested in learning how to engage regenerative design and development are invited to participate in an extraordinary workshop series facilitated by 7group's John Boecker and Tom Keiter at a superb historic Catskills center for creativity and possibility. Join us as we leap into the power of place-sourced imagining. The first of this trio of workshops will be held from 5 PM Friday evening through noon on Sunday, February 19-21, 2016.

In order to realize its full potential, the regenerative planning process must build our ableness to think systemically and holistically about whole living systems and our role in transforming those systems. The planning process at Spillian is being conceived as an instrument for developing regenerative thinking among all of us, as members of communities, and is designed to build the capacity and capability of all participants and stakeholders to think regeneratively.

Spillian is a 33 acre historic estate, built by the Fleischmanns Yeast Family in the 1880's as part of a summer retreat. Crowned by a museum-quality stick style mansion, embraced by the Catskills Forest, it now is the home of a center created to help people imagine past what they think is possible.
